Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of self-reported mental health problems between men and women who had been exposed to violence by intimate partners and those who had not. Data from the National Longitudinal Study of Women's Health are used to examine the prevalence of self-reported mental health problems among women who have experienced partner violence and those who have not. Results indicate that women who have experienced partner violence are more likely than those who have not to report having a mental health problem. This finding has implications for public health practice and research.

Instructions to this QTR

1. The manufacturer should update the manufacturing summary whenever a change is made in the equipment or procedure. The manufacturer should inform these changes to TÜV SÜD with written notice.
2. The qualification process shall be repeated if any essential changes are made in the production route or the manufacturing procedure.
